For the age its in very good shape. Been looked after. Vintage Boss sounds. PAUL WHITE straps on his guitar and puts this advanced multieffects unit to work. Theres no shortage of guitar effects units on the market, but because guitar sounds are so much a matter of personal taste, you have to try a few out before settling on one that suits your playing style. Some use digital distortion, some have an analogue front end followed by digital effects, and some even include valve preamps teamed with digital effects. The Boss GX700 uses a solidstate analogue front end to create its distortion and overdrive effects, and this is followed by a powerful multieffects unit featuring amp and speaker simulation which I understand is based on Rolands COSM modelling technology developed for the VG8 guitar system. While COSM may be technically complicated, from the users point FIRST IMPRESSIONS The 1U rack processor is sold under the Boss rather than the Roland name, probably to be more guitaristfriendly. Apart from the front panel which looks as though its been glazed in sweet and sour sauce the control layout is pretty typical of a well thoughtout effects unit, with the minimum of multifunction buttons. The signal chain can be thought of as guitar preamp, stereo effects processor, and speaker simulator, where the amp simulation comes as part of the general effects package.<http://www.eldorado777.ro/upload/editor/crystal-rainforest-manual.xml>

The preamp emulates a number of popular amplifier and stack types, while the speaker simulator can be turned off when the unit is to be used live with a guitar combo or stack. A builtin guitar tuner is included one of the best Ive ever used, by the way and the buttons are illuminated, so that you can see at a glance which effects are active in any given patch. As supplied, the GX700 comes with 100 factory presets and a further 100 user memories, which are filled with duplicates of the factory patches. Patch selection is via the front panel controls or MIDI, and Roland do a rather nice foot controller FC200 which is ideal for live performance. Powered from an AC adaptor, the preamp has a mono input, which is duplicated on the front panel for ease of connection. An interesting addition to the connection system is that the output can be set up in software to match guitar combos, guitar stacks, or the loop insert points of either. This affects both the level and tone of the output, as singlespeaker combos and multispeaker stacks have quite different characteristics. You can also switch off all of the above for live use. Another considerate touch relates to the speaker simulator this may be on or off within each patch you set up, but you can switch the speaker simulator on or off for all patches at a stroke if you need to. There are connectors for MIDI In, Out and Thru plus two further jacks for connecting pedals. Good Condition. It builds on the earlier GL100 Guitar Driver and also borrows much of its functionality from the Roland GP100. The amp modeller contains 7 models ranging from the Roland JC120 to the Peavey 5150 high gain amp and there are 9 different speaker simulations to choose from. Only one modulation effect can be used at the same time so the Flanger and Vibrato can not be used simultaneously. There is mono or stereo outputs.
